

The Drifting Playbook

SCHEDULING — DRIFTING — GOVERNING

Some of your rhythms genuinely govern; others run on habit. Real work is happening — but coherence is leaking at the seams, in the gap between your augmented pace and the rhythm meant to govern it. The drift is small at each step and large by the third or fourth. It is costing you before it shows in the metrics.

THE RISK

Fragmentation disguised as progress — drift that compounds out of sight.

YOUR MOVES

- 01 Audit every rhythm against drift. For each recurring meeting, ask two things: does it force a decision, and is its interval set by the rate of drift rather than habit? Tighten the ones that lag; cut the ones that decide nothing.
- 02 Find your widest seam. Locate the two functions that share an outcome but no common boss. That seam is where you are bleeding coherence. Install a fixed, mandatory rhythm across it.
- 03 Make attendance non-negotiable. At the seam, presence is the substitute for authority. Treat attendance as the command relationship it actually is — not a scheduling preference.

THIS WEEK

Map your seams. Pick the one costing you most, and set a single fixed rhythm across it with attendance required.

*Build the cadence. The seam will hold.
Lead the Way.*